CUSTOM HOUSE MEANNESSES.

A correspondent of a London paper, having made the voyage to America as an amateur steerage passenger, tells of an English immigrant who bought a spare pair of co.duroy trowsers, just before embarking, and was charged five shillings duty on them when he reached lings duty on them when he reached New York, because they did not seem to have been worn. The writer heard the have been worn. The writer heard the other day of a poor American girl to whom, as she was about sathing home after a foreign trip, a friend in Europe made a present of a silk dress. The garment was cut out, and the young lady proposed to make it herself during the oyage, but it was not finished when

The New York Custom-house exacted the full duty (60 per cent.), and as the young lany could not pay, the dress was conficated by the United States of America. Incidents ince these make the returning tourist leel mean. In both the cases we have mentioned the inspectors no doubt acted according to the regula-tions of the department, but the regula-tions do not seem to be in harmony with a common-sense interpretation of the statute, which exempts from duty "wearing apparel in actual use, and other per-sonal effects (not merchandise) * * * of persons arriving in the United States." Is cordurey trowsers are not personal effects, what are they?

Joaquin Miller says that he has always need Boston because it is so much like a bit of dear old London; that he has been treated worse than a Modoc, as a rule, by critical pirates; that "The Dan-ites" is a period photographic picture of the life in the mines where he worked at fourteen, and the characters real, all but the Chinamen; that when he was with the miners he would go around reciting poetry so that they came to call him "Billy the Piper;" that the character of "Billy Piper!" represents Joaquin Miller; that he is writing another play, founded on "The Baroness" is the York," and that the "Baroness" is the rest book he has ever written.
